COREY NIKOLORIC

Yes! Casey and Corey are sisters and proud of it! They grew up together in Washington, DC where they attended the National Cathedral School. Corey went to on to college in Arizona, graduating in 1980 from Arizona State University with a degree in Industrial Design from the College of Architecture. While she was in college, Corey went to work for New Times, Inc. (now Village Voice Inc.) and was gradually promoted to Art Director.

Life took Corey from Phoenix to Denver where she stayed in the publications business for many years, working for Westword (a part of the New Times/Village Voice family) and Weaver Publications, publisher for the Denver Metro Convention and Visitor's Bureau and Denver Metro Chamber of Commerce and other organizations.

In search of a little more mission, Corey took a job as the Art Director of Parenthood of the Rocky Mountains in 1999. She describes her role as “a great mix of graphic design, medical education, public affairs and development work.” Corey left Planned Parenthood in 2003 to strike out on her own as a freelance graphic artist. She is the single parent of a very active sixth grader. Nick is a great student, a championship swimmer and the apple of her eye.

Her considerable skills include publication design, identity standards, logos, stationery suites, print advertising, direct mail, and a limited (but growing) amount of web work. She works closely with the Rocky Mountain MS Center and Meritage Midstream Services.
